

Grab a guitar and some eyeliner, it's time to rock the Runaways' style.

If I'd been a teenager back in '76, I surely would have worshipped badass girl band the Runaways. There's nothing cooler in the world than five smokin' chicks who go to high school by day and wail on guitars by night, not to mention their sick feathered hair, mega eyeliner and tight T-shirts. The media dubbed members (clockwise, from top left) Lita Ford, Sandy West, Jackie Fox, Joan Jett and Cherie Currie "jailbait rockers," and lyrics to songs like "Cherry Bomb" definitely fit that mold, but the truth is, those girls could play. No prepackaged teen queens here, just raw angst and straightforward tunes. This majorly influential band broke up before I was born, but it's never too late to pay your respects. Since I'm not about to start a cover band, I'm gonna doll myself up with these beauty goods and transport my mind back to those way simpler and more rockin' times. —Courtney D.
